Well, here's the deal I had a customer come into the shop a couple of years ago with a slightly bent axle that he wanted fixed. We got to talking and he told me the axle was from an old Triumph chopper project that he had bought a couple of years earlier. His buddies had talked him into buying these boxes of parts, an engine and a couple of wheels with the assurance that they would help out with the restoration, but when it came time for the hard part they disappeared. Email or call with any questions or for more pics. LaCrosse WI. Make Honda. Model CB. Every piece except the heads and engine case was bought or built especially for this bike during the two years that it took to complete the project. The engine was built in Montana while the frame was being built in Oklahoma. The engine is a CB case, built to spec using a new lightened crankshaft, rods, 3mm oversized pistons, shaved heads, balanced components, and oversized valves. It was ported and relieved and bored, then fitted with four oversized KeihinCR carbs with polished aluminum, billet-turned flared racing intakes. Once the engine build was finished, the unpainted engine parts were chromed, the case was painted with several coats of silver paint, and the heads were painted General Motors red orange with heat resistant ceramic paint. The engine starts at a touch of the starter, then runs with a high-RPM, ripping, tearing sound much like that of a Formula 1 race car. The frame design was taken from the soft fail Harley Davidson, and cut and assembled from raw stock by well known chopper frame builders, Chopper One of Tulsa, Oklahoma. Next, the frame was fitten with two custom, chrome, spoke wheels with heavy gold plated nipples built by H D Wheels of Chatsworth, California, along with a set of different-sized, matching, custom poured whitewall tires. The heavy duty chrome front forks were then purchased and fitted to the bike for proper rake by Cycle One. After the bike was moved to Montana, the frame was lightened by outsourcing the drilling of a series of carefully spaced, matching, visually pleasing holes in the swing arm and the outside pivot arm to a mechanical engineering shop. The frame was drilled in several strategic locations to be used later during the installation of several components. Temporary handlebars were fitted to the frame to allow movement of the bike around the assembly area. The finish is striking in every regard, particularly for its attention to detail. For example, all of the socket head screws were machined to a taper and then brass plated. All of the fittings were are either brass or chrome. The battery box was assembled and drilled by the builder who then installed a painted 12 volt maintenance free battery and carefully positioned the assembly on the frame so that it would become a visible part of the bike. The fuel tank made to spec for the bike by Thompson Choppers. Once it was received, it was flushed clean of all construction by-product, and custom installation brackets were constructed by the builder. Once cleaned, the tank was attached to the frame with temporary brackets, and the vintage aircraft fuel cap was cut and fitted to the tank. It, too, was built to spec by Thompson Choppers. A special oil cap was constructed as a design feature from a heavy, solid brass radiator cap from an old Ford pickup â€" then lathe polished to a bright shine. Custom chrome oil lines were installed to both convey oil between the tank and the engine, and to connect the two together in a visual manner consistent with the design of the rest of the engine compartment. The whole apparatus was topped off with engine mounted, stainless steel heat and pressure gauges. The fenders, which were drawn and built by Milwaukee Steel, are strong enough for an adult to sit on either one without damage. Both brakes are four-piston, fully chromed Brembo disc brakes with chrome rotors. The foot rests, brake pedal, and gear shift are all matched, round chrome oversized pegs with alternating milled circles of brass and chrome, the same configuration also used on both handlegrips, one of which serves as the twist grip throttle. The huge 8 inch oversized headlight was metal spun and assembled for the builder. The last two tasks before sending the bike out for preparation and painting were: the installing of a custom sewm, neutral colored leather seat from a seat maker in Denver, and the custom assembly by the builder of frame mounted brass seat springs with shocks in a special, handmade coil-over configuration designed to highlight the seating arrangement. The bike was then disassembled and shipped to Ortiz Custom Cycles in Denver, a well known custom builder, for final smoothing of the welds and metal surfaces, and then the application of the magnificent, one-off paint job. Before the prep work was even begun, Larry Ortiz personally met with the owner and developed the overall painting plan using special paints, an imported artist skilled in pinstripe painting, and a third artist, this one specializing in creating special effects who was tasked with creating a fuel tank pictorial from a National Geographic photo of an exploding sun. Once that was done, a coat of BMW metallic white paint was applied to the frame, fenders, and fueltank, and the GM red orange color was used on the headlight, oil tank, several frame members, and the taillights. Without doubt, the paint job on the chopper, both in design, quality, originality, and application, is one of a kind Once the paint cured, the bike was returned to Montana and reassembled, and several high points added during the finishing up of the motorcycle. In order to use indicators that fit with the design of the machine and which would function with the original electric system, it was necessary to purchase both a specially built analogue speedometer, and a specially built analogue tachometer, from a German custom house, MotoGadget, since they are not unavailable for purchase over the counter. Matched aluminum housings, one each containing a speedometer and a tachometeter, with matching faces and indicator needles, were purchased to house the instruments. The finished gauges were installed on the bike by bolting the speedometer to the left handlebar, the tach to the right, and then integrating both into the machine with wiring concealed within the frame. It is difficult to overemphasize the quality of this feature. Analogue gauges are no longer in production, and the cost to persuade the manufacturer to build two new, duplicate instruments was very high. As well, it took months of fine adjusting before either instrument would produce reliable, consistent output. Needless to say, these two beautiful, polished, one-of-a-kind instruments are worth more than many commercially manufactured motorcycles. In keeping with the quality and uniqueness of the finish work, the temporary handlebars were replaced with oversized bars and risers supplied by Exile Cycle. The drive chains are oversized, heavy duty, and gold colored to fit the color scheme. The temporary handlebar levers were replaced with new heavy duty ones which are brass plated and machine polished. The taillight is a set of two small coordinated orange painted lights, one on each side of the rear fender, which lights also double as directional signals. The kickstand is heavy chrome, forward swinging, and attached to the left side. The last addition, was not the most expensive but may well be the most unique part of the bike is a small, rear-facing video camera was installed beneath the seat and connected to a small, upward-tilted screen attached between the forks just below the handlebars. Thus â€" no need for the clutter and obstruction of a pair of rear view mirrors! This bike comes with free shipping in the lower 48 states. Make Kawasaki. Model Kz May need a little gumout.
